maximum. And, again, I didn't agree with their formula how they got the world price, so -- but it was a matter -- accounting requirement, so it really didn't make any difference.

Q. And that was the maximum potential --

A. And that's what they said.

Q. Yeah, all right.

A. That was required for accounting purposes.

Q. Let's go to page 72. This one more memo from Mr. Phillips, but this time in June of 1990. And, again, he's referring to a conversation with you, and the only thing I'm interested in -- perhaps I'll take you to the second-last paragraph first because it talks about that interest rate that you've told us about. And he's noting, "Don held firm that he does want the interest to be kept current on the $12-million loan." He reports the fact he was trying to talk the Province into a deferral of that interest. He feels the Province has given significantly on this point and that because they are prepared to give the $12-million loan advance immediately..." et cetera. You were holding firm at that point.

Let me just take you to -- oh, yes, next paragraph, "I stressed to Don that later on we would have to review all our loan requirements and that there could be a
